Course Description:

This class will take students through the design, maintenance, and evolution of institutions of all kinds ranging from legislatures and central banks to labor unions, to simple behavioral norms. We will discuss the problems that these institutions have been created to solve, why institutions take the shape that they do, and how altering the rules of the game can tailor behaviors. By the end of the course, students should be able to understand cross-national variation in areas as diverse as political knowledge, central bank interest rates, or even the quality of European football teams through the analysis of formal rules and informal norms.

Requirements and Expectations:

Students are expected to attend seminar and complete all of the readings. The assigned materials must be read before class on the date listed in the syllabus (the readings are often quite difficult, so budget your time appropriately). Seminar will be a mixture of lecture, student presentations, and discussion and will be based on the assumption that students have completed the reading for that day and are able to analyze the content. Please note that 10% of the grade is based on participation in class discussion and 30% is based on in-class presentations.

General Program Learning Outcomes (PLOs) for Political Science:

1. An understanding of the processes, theories, and empirical regularities of political institutions and political behavior in the students chosen emphasis area: American politics, comparative politics, or international relations.
2. An ability to employ critical thinking and demonstrate social scientific literacy, including basic quantitative literacy.
3. A capacity to utilize contemporary social science research methods to conduct rigorous research on political phenomena.

4. Effective written communication skills, especially the ability to convey complex concepts and information in a clear and concise manner.
5. An ability to apply abstract theory and research methods to understand contemporary political events and public policies.

Intended Student Learning Outcomes (SLOs):

At the end of this course, students should be able to:

1. Communicate a thorough theoretical understanding of the structure and operation of political institutions (corresponds to PLOs 1 and 4, listed above).
2. Demonstrate knowledge of the central questions, theories, approaches, and findings in regards to collective action problems and the management of common pool resources (corresponds to PLO 1).
3. Comprehend and critique contemporary political science research on institutional design and analysis (corresponds to PLO 2).
4. Conduct basic but rigorous social science research on formal rules and behavioral norms (corresponds to PLOs 3 and 4).

Evaluation:

Grades will be based on four components.

- Seminar Participation: 10%
- Presentations: 30%
- Midterm Exam: 30%
- Final Exam: 30%

In each session one or more students will make a presentation on the readings assigned for that day. Those students will be selected in advance at random. Before the main presentation, one student will be selected at random to give a one-minute summary of the reading. These selections will occur in real time (selection → summary). These advance notice and pop presentations will determine 30% of the final grade.

On Tuesday, October 13, students will make individual presentations of a formal rule or set of rules of their choosing. Details will be distributed two weeks prior.

Honor:

Exams are to be completed individually with no outside help. Please refer to the Academic Honesty Policy here: <http://studentlife.ucmerced.edu/what-we-do/student-judicial-affairs/academicy-honesty-policy>

Books:

The following texts are required reading. I have no preference over how the students acquire the books. They can be found used at a substantial savings and many of these books are assigned in other courses, so it is quite possible that these may be borrowed/purchased from other students.

- John H. Aldrich. 1995. Why Parties?: The Origin and Transformation of Political Parties in America University of Chicago Press
- Arend Lijphart. 1999. Patterns of Democracy: Government Forms and Performance in Thirty-Six Countries. Yale University Press
- Elinor Ostrom. 1990. Governing the Commons: The Evolution of Institutions for Collective Action. Princeton University Press
- Brian Skyrms. 1996. The Stag Hunt and the Evolution of Social Structure. Cambridge University Press
